The injuries of Flora Glatz, though serious, are not necessarily fatal. She is disfigured for life.

New York, March 10.—Another body was started this evening from this city for the crematory in Washington, Pennsylvania. Only two months ago Mr. Abraham Kauffman, of No. 233 East Fifty-second street, said to his son-in-law, Dr. Samuel Hahn, "Trornise me to have my body cremated when I die." The promise was given. "But," said Dr. Hahn, "though I am a younger man than you, I may die first; promise me in turn that in that case you will have my body cremated." This promise, too, was given, and the men shook hands. Recently Dr. Hahn, in attending a patient who had the erysipelas, was infected with the disease. The erysipelas gave rise to meningitis and pneumonia. He was taken seriously ill on February 25th, and died at nine o'clock last Friday evening at his brother-in-law's house.

Mr. Kauffman did rot know whether or not the crematory at Washington was yet in existence, or whether, if it were, the use of it could be obtained. He communicated with a friend in Alleghany City, and made arrangements to have the furnace heated. Fire was lighted in the furnace at one o'clock to-day. Mr. Kauffman received information that about thirty-six hours would be required to bring the furnace to the proper degree of heat for successful cremation. It is expected to a rive at the lord lieutenant will be erected on the site.

Work is being vigorously pushed forward at the new mini in this city replacing the old union coinage with that of the empire. The new gold pieces are of beautiful design, and the specimen kindly shown us by Lord Snowden, of Pennayl-wanta, dispector-general of the imperial minis is an exquisite one. The coin bears the bust of his imperial majesty, surrounded by the fegend, "Ulysess." Washington, D. C., March 8, 1880—Editors of the Constitution: I see from your editorials and from some communications sent from this city by your correspondents, that it is necessary for me to give the facts in regard to some votes I gave in the committee of ways and means on the tariff question.

1. The question concerning sugar was one to regulate the tests to be applied and the manner of determining the amount of saccharine matter in the sugars imported into this country. The question related to the color of sugar, Dutch standard—polariscopes, etc.—and in my judgment a reduction of the tariff was not involved in the bill voted upon. The whole question involved a wrangle between the secretary of the treasury and the importers and refiners of West India sugars. I voted for the Gibson bill, and after it was defeated I voted to postpone the subject, hoping and still believing we will get an arrangement more in the interest of the consumer than any yet proposed.

2. There was a proposition made in committee to refer the whole subject of tariff revision and modification to a special committee to refer the whole subject of tariff revision and modification to a special committee with instructions to report at the secretary of the interest of the consumer than any yet proposed.

English Politics.

The parliament of 1874 is to be dissolved ed at once, and the queen, in the pompous words of her prime minister, is about to recur to the sense of her people." Lord Beaconsfield submits in his manifesto two issues. He wishes the people to say whether or no they will sanction home rule in Ireland, and whether or no they desire a change in his foreign policy. He intimates that he has done much for Ireland, and more than intimates that if his foreign policy is not maintained, the peace of Europe will not be preserved. The liberal leaders will deny that they are in favor of home rule, and will then proceed to show that the distress in Ireland is partly due at least to the glory-and-gunpowder policy of the government. They will hold out measures of reform at home-even reforms in the matter of land-tenure. They will lay great stress on the need of such measures, atapointing of the prevailing disclinch their argument. They will denounce Beaconsfield's "peace ciple, costly in application and dangertop to bottom. The government has on its side the bulk of the aristocracy, and the support of those who are dazzled by military glory, or by what the premier calls "the ascendancy of England in the counsels of Europe." The best men, the bravest intellects, and the great middle class are arrayed on the liberal side. The struggle will be short but intense. The ovations that Gladstone and the other great liberals receive wherever they appear, indicates the depth of public feeling; but no one can safely predict from these ovations the overthrow of the tories. The latter are strongly entrenched, and if the liberals win at all it will be by a close vote. But a small majority of the house of commons will suffice to bring the liberals back to power next month. It is not known why Beaconsfield decided to immediately dissolve parliament. It would not not have expired by limitation until next March, and a general election might therefore have been postponed nearly a year. Apprehensions perhaps of a fresh outbreak in Afghanistan of new continental complications, and of increased suffering in Ireland, may have led him to select the present time. The difficult problems of his administration are just now in fact in abeyance, and he hopes doubtless to carry the country before they assume some new and perplexing form. The shape of the contest will, however, be more fully known when the addresses of the liberal leaders are received. These will be published in the course of a week,

Opposition to the Third Term. Mr. Ethan Allen, of New York, who was chairman of the liberal republican national committee in 1872, has been sub jected to an interview with a newspaper eporter. As might naturally be sup posed, Mr. Allen is a most strenuous op ponent of the third term. He says the comination of General Grant would be political crime, and declares that to violate the unwritten law against a third term is to place the country in the road that leads to perdition. He says that the people of the country are now called upon to face a conspiracy of bold, bad men who have control of the party machinery, and who intend to seize the gov ernment, and he asserts, with some vehemence, that any man who does not re bel against such a purpose is a coward who will not be treated with undue severity if he is compelled to bear the curse of future evils as the result of his present weakness. After delivering himself in a style the emphasis of which we can not reproduce without an extended quo tation, Mr. Allen expresses the belief that before next June, public sen timent will pronounce against with honor" policy as unsound in princi- Grant, and if he is nominated in spite of this, Mr. Allen asserts that ous in all its consequences. The cost of there will be another republican candithe Afghan and Zulu campaigns will be date in the field. He declares moreover presented from every husting, and jingo- that if it were desirable a convention sm will get a very thorough sifting from representing a majority of the virtue and intelligence of the republican party could be assembled within thirty days to protest against the third term, and he adds that this convention will be held should the managers of the machine persist in nominating Grant. This is all very fine talk, and we have no doubt that Mr. Ethan Allen is very incere about it; but General Grant will be nominated, there will be no formal republican protest, there will be no repubican convention, and there will be no other republican candidate. Those who choose to oppose a third term, as well as those who oppose the republican tendency in the direction of revolutionizing the government-a tendency which has been endorsed recently in the most emphatic anner by the supreme court-will unite with the democratic party in an effort to save the country. It is by no means sure that General Grant can be defeated, for northern public opinion seems ripe for be experiment which his election would naugurate; but the south is in favor of his omination by the republicans because his candidacy would be a fair and square test of the intentions of the northern people. The result, whatever it might be would put an end to much useless and unprofitable discussion, and leave no further excuse for the existence of the spirit of sectionalism. We are convinced, also, that if General Grant is a candidate, he will make an attempt to take his seat whether he is elected or not Certainly the south would take no part in any effort to prevent such a cons mation, and it is equally as certain that the conservative leaders at the north would remain as quiet as they did when the frauds of the electoral commission were perpetrated; but even this would be better than the continuation of an exsperating controversy between the sec-

ions. Whatever the result, the south

ment, or in the strong arm of a military tive than any step yet taken by those who are conspiring to revolutionize our present system of government. During the extra session of congress, when these laws were under consideration, The Constitution made bold to enter into a discussion as to their constitutionality with some of the more prominent organ of republican thought and opinion. The arguments we present were met by the ssertion that control of state elections by the general government was one of the logical results of the war, and the arguments themselves, based upon a simple, unstrained constitutional view of the question, remained unanswered. The rguments of the democrats in congress, in the debate that is likely to become memorable, were evaded, and those who presented a plain interpretation of the constitution were rebuked as rebels, seessionists and traitors to the nation with a big N. In the state elections that followed the extra session, the question as to whether the government had a right to invest the polls with a cordon of federal troops was made a distinct and unmistakable issue, and the result was that the democrats suffered overwhelming defeats in every state at the north and west where an election was held. Nothing is easier than to show why, in the interest of constitutional government this result should have been vastly different, but all argument of this sort was silenced by the solid and solemn fact that the public sentiment of the north is in favor of using federal troops at the polls. It is no longer a question, either with the supreme court or with the people of the north, whether a national law is violative of the constitution. Constitutional or unconstitutional, if it is a national law-(we use the term "national" because it is becoming impressive)-embodying an enlargement of the powers of the central government, congress has the right to pass it, and it must be enforced by the national authority. In other words, it is held by the supreme court, and the court is maintained by the public entiment of the north, that the nationa government must be the sole judge of its own necessities-of its own power-and may frame laws accordingly; the results of the war having given the government not only the right to protect itself, but the right to provide against even the contingency of a necessity of protecting itself. This is perhaps an awkward way to express it, but if there is any obscurity in the expression, there is certainly none n the intentions of the republican party. That is the theory which controls the public sentiment of the south, and which will continue to control it while sectionalism keeps alive the memories and animosities of the war; and the south may as well prepare to face both the theory and its practical application with the same degree of composure with which the matter in this shape, because, owing to a curious and, as we believe, a fatal misconception, every step in the direction of consolidation since the war ha been intended by the north and accepted by our people and our newspapers as an attack upon the south. This idea has been promoted by the clamorous protests the south has made against all invasions of the rights of the states and against all extra-constitutional legislation; and the clamor was based upon the fact that we have experienced the desperate and leadly effects of reconstruction. But it s to be borne in mind that reconstruction legislation was of a special character and was not so much an invasion of the rights of the states as an attack upon our social organism. That we survived that attack and even drew strength therefrom ought to be an impressive fact for the north to consider at this particular

Nevertheless, out of the intention of the econstruction acts and the clamorous protests of the south against them has grown a belief which finds involuntary expression in both sections that ever step in the direction of consolidation i an attack upon and a defeat of the south How false this belief is time will show. It is an attack upon the rights of all the states of all sections of the country. There s abundant reason why all the states should protest against legislative enactments and judicial decisions intended to revolutionize our form of government, but there is no more reason for the south to protest than there is for the north, or the east, or the west, to lift up a warning roice—especially when protests in this uarter are misunderstood. The southern states have just as much interest in free government as the northern states, out not a particle more. One generation of our people have worn themselves ou rguing against facts instead of recognizng them; but even the heretofore senti iental south has discovered that there is practical side to politics. It would be endish to gloat over the movement in the direction of "a strong man" and a strong government or to contribute to that seems to be the inevitable; but we can at least await events with composure upheld by a knowledge of the fact that, whatever may happen, we cannot be worsted. We have the advantage of experience as well as of despair. We are organized. We hold a position which, in evolution of the sort contemplated, is solutely impregnable. No man can be placed in the president's chair who is strong enough to refuse the terms which it is in our power to demand. Therefore all things considered, we do not perceive that the south is called upon to make any great outcry over the political tendencies of the time. In other words, if the cook is compelled to stand in the fire to fry the fishes, we know of no good reason why the fishes shouldn't submit to the operation with equanimity. Let it not be supposed that this is the inspiration of ness. Whatever may be said of the prospects of free government, the political and material prospects of the south were never better than at this moment The sictory we wrong from one disaster we are certain to wrest from another. Let the conspirators against the government proceed!

The doctrine that a state officer may be punished by federal authority for an offense committed, not against the United States, or any law of the United States, but against state law, is not only novel, but involves consequences of the most momentous character. It is a practical judicial repeal, Jadge Field observes, of the tenth amendment to the constitution. It is difficult to see what rights can any longer be considered as reserved to the states or the people thereof which congress cannot override. The opinion of the court forcibly recalls the unanimity with which the judges of England, in the reign of Charles I., deciared that the royal percogative was personnunt over all law, and that there was no act of parliament with which the royal authority might not dispense.

Mr. Dillaye ought to at once encase himself in a steel vest and corrugated sheet-iron breeches if he hopes to essape the fool-killer.

—Covington Star: A serious difficulty occurred at the Whitehead house, in Conyers, on last Wednesday night, between a citizen of Conyers and a commercial traveler named Sim Sligh, which resulted in the serious but not fatai injury of Mr. Sligh by a blow on the head inflicted by the former. It occurred soon after supper time, and was caused, we learn, by a misunderstanding about a social game of cards. Mrs. Sligh, who was visiting the family of Mr. Franklin Wright, of our city, was summoned by telegraph to go at once to her hashand's relief. She left on the 10 o'clock up through freight, and reached him in a few hours after he was hurt. Through the skillful treatment of Dr. Rosser and the kind attention of friends, Mr. Sligh was able to proceed to his home in Madison on Thursday night. We suppose he will be alt right in a few days. they are not all rich, and many of them are not fully out of of debt, but there is much in the situation to encourage them. The cotton crop of 1873 amounted to about 9,000 bales, and realized at $40 ner bale $360,000. The crop of 1879 is estimated at 15,000 bales, which, at $50 per bale, would realize $750,000. It is perfectly clear that a large part of this immense yield of money has gone to pay for "back rations" with the debtor class, but with those free from debt it has gone to augment their cash capital for such investments as are most inviting, and therefore has added to the real wealth of the country. Fewer farmers are embarrassed in their resources than at this time last year, while more of them are able to stand alone and more of them are able to stand alone and help themselves with their own resources. So far there has been a clear gain, and another such cotton crop at 12c. would place our people in better condition than at any time in ten years past. On the other hand, what will come if only half a crop is made at 7c. or 8c ? -Albany Advertiser: From parties who came up to the city from the neighborhood of Baconton this morning we learned the particulars of one of the boldest and most particulars of one of the boldest and most diabolical acts of villainy that we have been called upon to record in some time. About one mile and a half from Baconton station, sixteen miles below Albany, in Mitchell county, there resides a prosperous and respected farmer by the name of W. C. Withington. He is of that old-fashioned, industrious and independent class of farmers who operate on a small scale, and live at home, never employing more than one or two laborers at a time; and, whilst he is not a man of wealth, still it is the general impression in the neigherhood that he has considerable money. Last night Mr. Withington and his wife, who, it seems, were the only persons on the place, were

—Covington Star: A serious difficulty occurred at the Whitehead house, in Conyers, on last Wednesday night, between a citizen of Conyers and a commercial traveler named Sim Sligh, which resulted in the serious but not fatai injury of Mr. Sligh by a blow on the head inflicted by the former. It occurred soon after supper time, and was caused, we learn, by a misunderstanding about a social game of cards. Mrs. Sligh, who was visiting the family of Mr. Franklin Wright, of our city, was summoned by telegraph to go at once to her husband's relief. She left on the 10 o'clock up through freight, and reached him in a few hours after he was hurt. Through the skillful treatment of Dr. Rosser and the kind attention of friends, Mr. Sligh, was able to proceed to his home in Madison on Thursday night. We suppose he will be alt right in a few days.

—Sparta Times and Planter: The people of Hancock county ought to be gratified at their present outlook as compared with their condition twelve months ago. True, they are not all rich, and many of them are not fully out of of debt, but there is much in the situation to encourage them. they are not all rich, and many of them are not fully out of of debt, but there is much in the situation to encourage them. The cotton crop of 1873 amounted to about 3,000 bales, and realized at $40 per bale $360,000. The crop of 1879 is estimated at 15,000 bales, which, at $50 per bale, would realize $750,000. It is perfectly clear that a large part of this immense yield of money has gone to pay for "back rations" with the debtor class, but with those free from debt it has gone to augment their cash capital for such investments as are most inviting, and therefore has added to the real wealth of the country. Fewer farmers are embarrassed in their resources than at this time last year, while more of them are able to stand alone and help themselves with their own resources. So far there has been a clear gain, and auother such cotton crop at 12c, would place

—Albany Advertiser: From parties who came up to the city from the neighborhood of Baconton this morning we learned the paraculars of one of the boldest and most diabolical acts of villainy that we have been called upon to record in some time. About one mile and a half from Baconton station, sixteen miles below Albany, in Mitchell county, there resides a prosperous and respected farmer by the name of W. C. Withington. He is of that old-fashioned, industrious and independent class of farmers who operate on a small scale, and live at home, never employing more than one or two laborers at a time; and, whilst he is not a man of wealth, still it is the general impression in the neigherhood that he eral impression in the neigherhood that he has considerable money. he is not a man of wealth, still this the general impression in the neigherhood that he has considerable money. Last night Mr. Withington and his wife, who, it seems, were the only persons on the place, were aroused by an alarm or noise of some kind, which caused the husband to get up. He then discovered that the fencing of his field was on fire, and immediately ran down to where it was, and went to work to extinguish it. He had been gone but a few minutes when a man rushed up to the house and called to Mrs. Withington, saying that he had been sent by her husband, for a bucket of water. Suspecting nothing wrong, and acting as most any other woman would under the circumstances, Mrs. Withington opened the door to hand out the bucket when the unknown viliain promply dealt her a fearful blow on the head with a club which knocked her senseless to the floor. She lay in an unconscious state for some time, and when she recovered she head the incendiary rummaging through the house. She then knew that the fence had been fired to get her husband away from the house, and that the man who had knocked her down was bent upon robbery. As soon as she realized the perilous situation, she commenced to noiselessly crawl toward the door. Once safely outside, and within hearing of her husband, she gave the alarm. Mr. Withington promptly answered and started for the house, but arrived too late to catch the thief. As soon as the latter heard the alarm he made haste to escape. Mr. Sandy McCollum, a near neighbor of Mr. Withington, he becamp alarmed about the safety of his own family and returned to his home as quickly as possible. We learn that all that was missed from the house by Mr. and Mrs. Withington this morning was about ten pounds of tobacco. If there was any money in the house the thief did not find it. THE SUFREME COURT.

WARNER, C. J.

This case came on for trial in the court below upon an issue formed on an affidavit of illegality to an execution levied on the defendant's property. On the trial of that issue the jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant made a motion for a new trial on the several grounds therein set forth, which was overruled, and the defendant excepted. It appears from the record that on the 22nd January 1862, Steadman, as the agent of the Gwinnett manufacturing company, executed the following draft: At sight pay to the order of William Maltbie two thousand five hunnred dollars for cash at 7 per cent, which was addressed to N. P. Hotchkiss, treasurer, and accepted by him on the 22d January, 1862. This paper was indorsed on the back thereof by N. P. Hotchkiss, Enoch Steadman, Merit Camp and James P. Simmons, in the order in which their names are here stated, but was not indorsed by Maltbie nor negotiated by him, he having loaned the money to the was not indorsed by Maltbie nor negotiated by him, he having loaned the money to the company and required personal security therefor. Suit was instituted on said draft by the executors of Maltbie against the Gwinnett manufacturing company as principal, Hotchkiss, Steadman, Camp, and Simmons as indorsers. At the March term of the court, 1869, the defendants (event Hotchkiss who had gone into ants (except Hotchkiss, who had gone into bankruptcy) confessed judgment to the plaintiffs for the sum of $2,500, and judgplaintiffs for the sum of $2,500, and judgment was entered thereon against the Gwinnett manufacturing company as principal, and Steadman, Camp and Simmons in the order named as indorsers, and execution issued thereon against the defendants in the order as specified in the judgment. Camp paid off the fi fa principal and interest after it had been levied on his land, and proved the same in bankruptcy against the estate of Steadman for the full amount thereof, but the register only allowed one-third of the amount, $1,092.67. Camp then levied the fi fa on the property of Simmons to compel him to pay his pro rata share of the execution as his co-security, the Gwinnett manufacturing company being nett manufacturing company being insolvent. This is the second time this case has been before this court. When it was here at a former term and decided, but two judges presided, and at the request of the plaintiff in error, he was allowed on the present argument as a matter of favor but set as a matter of right, to review the denot as a matter of right, to review the decision made in this same case at the former term, which decision was that Simmons, by his indorsement of the paper as set forth in the record, was liable thereon as surety, and was also liable to his co-surety to con-ribute his pro rata share towards the paynent of the debt under the statutory laws of this state. After a careful review of the former decision of the court in this case in the light of the reviewing argument, this court is unanimously of the opinion that the former decision of the court was a cor-rect and sound exposition of the law as ap-plicable to the facts of the case, and do now reaffirm it. The only remaining question in the case, is whether there was any special in the case, is whether there was any special argreement between Simmons and Camp, his co-surety at the time Simmons signed the paper, that he was only to be bound as the last endorser, so as to take it out of the general rule as to his legal liability as sure-ty, and did the court properly submit that question to the jury in its charge? The court charged in relation to this point in the case, "that the jury, after considering all the facts in the evidence, will determine for themselves whether it is shown that at the time of the signing or writing their the time of the signing or writing their names there was an understanding and agreement known to Camp and assented to or or acquiesced in by him by silence or expressly, that Simmons should be liable only as last endorser." In view of the evidence in the record, there was no error in the charge the paper cannot override, alter or change the law as to the rights of the other parties the law as to the rights of the other parties to it without their agreement and consent, and especially a co-surety. Let the judgment of the court below be affirmed. Winn & Simmons, for plaintiff in error. Clark & Pace; N. L. Hutchins, for de-

1 This plaintiff came into court claiming a verdict under a contract set out in his complaint, and to entitle him to recover he must come also with sufficient proof to establish his demand. The testimony as shown by the record is, that he was by his contract to furnish the hands and superinted the two plantations for the year 1873 belongiff to the estate. It was necessary therefore, for hiff to show that he had complied; first, by gettling the requisites number of hands, and second, that he superintented the places according to his agreement. The testimony does not show that he did either. On the contrary, it appears that a sufficient number of hands to cultivate the places were not furnished, and that his infangement was unskilful and that his infangement was

be, in such communication as to put the former in possession of the information that the latter is not complying with his contract. This is not a parallel case to that of upon the plantations of an estate, and whilst the representatives of that estate are bound to give attention to its interests, and are charged with notice as to how it is managed, yet the evidence in this case discloses the fact that the administrator was in poor health and died during the year or shortly thereafter and there is none as to the prox
